

SALVIA COAHUILENSIS

Native to a mountainous region of Mexico, this little evergreen salvia provides spectacular color in the fall and spring months. This profuse bloomer produces blue-purple flowers that attract hummingbirds. Low-growing and somewhat sprawling, this herbaceous perennial is similar in appearance to Salvia chamaedryoides, but has greener foliage. It prefers light shade in the low deserts, and is the perfect size to plant under mesquites and palo verdes. Prune back heavily in the winter to provide more stems for spring blossoms.
